

Caversham Library

Library services, including Caversham Library, form part of the Budget Consultation. Reading Borough Council estimates it needs to save a further £39million over the next 3 years to 2019. Reading's grant funding has reduced by 40% at a time when demand for local Council services in Reading is increasing. Over the next three years the Council will be making a series of budget proposals to make the savings needed.

www.reading.gov.uk/budget gives links to more information and how you can comment up to 5pm on Friday 16 October 2015.

One of the services listed is Libraries. It is proposed that the whole library service be reviewed and transformed on the basis of objective criteria with the aim of saving in the region of £600,000 by 2017/18. There is reference to a "Neighbourhood Library Offer" where the location, nature and opening hours of the service points will be informed by a full analysis of needs, performance and costs. Where appropriate, libraries would be co-located with other services in community hubs.

The report explains that changes could include:

- Providing services digitally
- Delivering back-office efficiencies
- Co-locating library services with other local services
- Using library services to deliver other service outcomes and priorities
- Volunteer-run libraries, co-delivering services with community groups, and increasing the use of volunteers
- Making better use of self-service technologies
- Sharing services
- Reducing opening hours
- Closing branch libraries.

If you value your local service, you should express your views through each stage of consultation.

Caversham Library provides a range of highly valued inclusive services and is a hub at the heart of the local community -exceptionally well used by all ages. In addition to the usual library services, it is a central point for all sorts of information and runs popular sessions for adults, school children and pre-school children. It is a hive of activity over the school holidays and after school and a vital resource for those not able to access a computer or the internet at home.

The History of Caversham Library

Our response should focus on current and future needs but it may also be interesting to share some history on the library building. The land, where the library now stands, had been the playground of Caversham House Academy, a school for boys. Church Street separated the playground from the main school buildings in Caversham House and a tunnel was constructed for the boys to cross safely. After the school closed, the large Georgian house gradually decayed and was demolished in the 1960s to make way for the precinct. You can see the house and the playground in this painting. Further right are the Working Men's club and Caversham Baptist Church. The church was built in 1877 which gives us a clue to the date of the painting.

The land for the library was donated by Mr Bullivant Williams and most of the construction costs were funded by the Carnegie Trust. The Scottish-American businessman and philanthropist, Andrew Carnegie, supported the building of public and university libraries across the world. His motto, 'Let there be light' was sometimes shown above the door. The award-winning design in 1906 was by the architect William George Hooper Lewton (1856-1914). A student at the Reading School of Art and local to Caversham, Lewton worked and trained with the well-known local architect William Ravenscroft. The style has been referred to as 'Free Renaissance' and has a very quirky mix of different elements. The tower is topped by the swan weather vane. As you will see from this picture, shortly after the library opened, the present clock with the figure of Old Father Time did not feature in the original design. These were added at the request of the Caversham Urban District Council which disbanded in 1911 as part of the boundary change.

It is a fine building which has stood the test of time. It deserves a fine future.
